DESIGN IS PERSONAL

I knew early that design would be my life's work. In second grade, I told my mother I would grow up to be an architect or an artist. Today, I like to think I'm both. That creative curiosity became a lifetime purpose for shaping spaces that make everyday life more beautiful, meaningful, and connected.

With a Master's degree in Architecture from the University of Idaho and more than 20 years in the design and construction industry, I bring both imagination and real-world expertise to every project. My career has taken me from Los Angeles to New York City, working with a wide range of clients on projects of varying scale and complexity. California is home, and its lifestyle continues to inspire my approach to residential design.

For me, designing a home is an especially personal privilege. It begins with listening: understanding how people live, what they need, what they dream about, and what could work better. I believe thoughtful design helps us feel good, function better, and connect more deeply to ourselves, our families, and our environment.

Across my career, I have contributed to more than 250 successfully completed projects representing nearly $1 billion in aggregate construction value. That experience has taught me that great design must also be practical. I respect the significant investment each homeowner makes, and I work to protect their time and budget, clarify options, and empower them to make confident, informed decisions.

Nothing is more rewarding than seeing a finished project become a home filled with life. Helping clients create spaces where they can truly thrive is not simply what I do; it's why I do it. I'm grateful to bring that passion and experience to the homeowners we serve at Marrokal Design & Remodeling.
